D160 Cochrane Papua New Guinea Collection

Descriptive Note

The Cochrane Papua New Guinea Collection is a unique and comprehensive documentation of Papua New Guinea cultural life between 1949 and 1966. The collection concentrates on the expressive aspects of Papua New Guinea Cultures.

Percy Cochrane went to Papua New Guinea in 1949 as Senior Broadcasts Officer for the Territory Administration. He was accompanied by his wife Renata Cochrane and two small children. Renata Cochrane was a trained teacher and writer. She was later employed by the Administration as a Publications Officer.

Over the next 16 years the Cochranes' public occupations and private interests converged in their efforts to photograph, record and document facets of Papua New Guinea cultural life, the work of the Administration and Catholic Missions. After leaving Papua New Guinea they continued to write and make films at the request of media organisations including the ABC and BBC.

The Collection includes the Cochranes freelance and professional work for the Administration. This includes recordings of ethnic Papua New Guinea music recorded in situ at festivals and ceremonies. There are also contemporary radio scripts explaining the significance of the music and the instruments played.

The primary audience for the radio programs, films and publications produced by the Cochranes were the people of Papua New Guinea. The programs were devised by the Territory Administration to assist in its objective of drawing the diverse tribes closer together in an emerging Nation.

Photographs form a major component of the collection. Many of the photographs were taken by the Cochranes on their field trips.

A collection of nearly 500 colour transparencies detail traditional activities including: pottery, tattooing, festivals and ceremonies from a variety of regions. These districts include: Motu People; Amphlett Islands; Eastern and Western Highlands; Forei people and Sepik District.

Renata was employed by Papua New Guinea Administration as a Publications Officer. Later she worked for the first film unit, writing film scripts. Copies of the scripts are among the collection. Renata Cochrane also wrote a newspaper column, "What do you think?" published in the Pacific Post between 1960 and 1963.

The collection contains articles and booklets by the Cochranes produced for use in Schools, including a series of articles on Papua New Guinea Government during the early 1960s. Some by Renata Cochrane are in French.

There is an unpublished manuscript by Renata Cochrane containing oral histories of Papua New Guineans both indigenous and expatriates.

An important feature of the collection is material relating to the Catholic Missions. Catholic Missionaries arrived in Papua New Guinea in 1885 when the Order of the Sacred Heart had established a mission on Yule Island. Renata Cochrane was fluent in French and Italian and a devout Catholic. She regularly travelled to the remote missions around the islands and wrote about their work for the International Catholic Press. The Collection includes: a large group of Black and White photographs; correspondence between Renata Cochrane and Missions; and newspaper and journal articles by Renata Cochrane. Articles are written in English and French.
